Patrick O'Flaherty performs his original songs in both English and Gaelic. The Irish-born artist will perform Monday and Tuesday, July 29-30 at Stoney Lonen.

Stoney Lonen to Host Patrick O'Flaherty

Multi-instrumentalist Sets Two Nights of Shows in Rehoboth

A musician since his formative years in Connemara, Ireland, Patrick O'Flaherty performs as a solo artist and with The Poor Clares and Celtic Folk. His musical career began with the harmonica, and later expanded to include a wide repertoire of instruments.

The multi-instrumentalist, who now lives in Syracuse, New York, will perform Monday and Tuesday, July 29-30, at Stoney Lonen Fish & Fine Spirits. The restaurant is located at the corner of Wilmington and Second streets in Rehoboth Beach.

The Poor Clares' second album, "Change of Habit" reached the national charts and enjoyed success, while the Celtic Folk has played at a wide array of festivals and events, including National Solidarity Day on the D.C. Mall.

The performer is one of the few artists today who writes original songs in his native Gaelic.

His work continues to promote the Irish music scene and foster Irish culture. His original efforts have earned him the nod from the New Orleans Irish Society's Coamnuigteoir Award, the Johanna Seither Award from the Celtic Nations Heritage Festival of New Orleans and the D.C. Irish Radio Show's Musician of the Year Award.

His live performances include songs in both English and Gaelic. His albums include "Andrea's Brown Eyes," "Last Waltz," "Ride the Waves" (with the Celtic Folk) and "Change of Habit" (with the Poor Clares).
